1. Read the article and choose the best answer.

If you have ever finished reading the latest blockbuster, thought that it was a total disaster, and decided that you could have done infinitely better yourself, you might consider adopting the following techniques. You may not grab a literary prize, but if you've got an understanding of the publishing industry, it could bring you some financial success and enable you to beat the opposition.

Before you decide on your subject matter, be cunning and examine the current market. If you can prove that historical dramas are returning to popularity, consider that type of story but with a unique twist, and avoid the less appealing genres. Start by looking around you — in newspapers, on TV — for stories, characters and settings. Bearing in mind that the US market is five times the size of Britain's, you've got to admit that a novel set in New England will have greater sales potential than one set in Devon, England.

However, choose a genre and subject matter you feel comfortable with. Thorough research will add to the strength and depth of your writing and give you more confidence. Read relevant history books, biographies and travel books to get the feel of your chosen period or setting. Once you have formulated your characters, work out possible story lines and locations. Start to sketch out pieces of dialogue and different scenes. Only then should you set about writing your novel.

Ask yourself the following questions as you write: are there important issues involved? Do the characters leap out of the page at you and appear larger than life? Does drama run throughout the novel, making the story worth reading? Are there multiple points of view? Do the characters continue to grow and not become obsessed with trivia? Does the story open with a crisis? You should be answering 'yes' to each question.

Once the novel is completed, you must find an agent. Many leading publishers will only consider submissions via an established agent and will largely ignore unsolicited books. Again, research is the key. Look for an agent that represents your genre and style.

Finally, do not forget that the book has to be marketed once it is published, so you, the author, will become one of the novel's 'Unique Selling Points' and you will need to promote yourself. Both you and the book will benefit from having a good story to tell. (From Guardian)

1. The article contains advice for people who want to
 - A read a wider range of literary material.
 - B win a literary prize for their writing.
 - C understand the publishing industry better.
 - D compete with successful writers.
2. A novel will have more chance of success if it
 - A is based on historical fact.
 - B can be serialized on TV.
 - C can appeal to a larger number of readers.
 - D is set in the country the writer lives in.
3. Which comment is made in the third paragraph?
 - A As you do your research, you will get the feel of your chosen period and setting.
 - B The strength and depth of your novel will depend on the time you spend writing it.
 - C Plan your setting and story lines before you create your characters.
 - D Only write pieces of dialogue once you have started writing the novel.
4. Writers need an agent because
 - A publishers don't usually accept manuscripts direct from writers.
 - B agents can suggest what kind of research is necessary.
 - C agents offer help and support when things go wrong.
 - D publishers usually deal only with writers they know.
5. You should remember that
 - A books need to find a market.
 - B different markets need different kinds of books.
 - C authors need to help in the marketing of their books.
 - D authors should be good speakers.

Уровень: Пороговый / Продвинутый

1. Read the following text and answer the questions that follow it.

- The stylistic innovation in painting known as Impressionism began in the 1870's. The Impressionists wanted to depict what they saw in nature, but they were inspired to portray fragmentary moments by the increasingly fast pace of modern life. They concentrated on the play of light over objects, people, and nature, breaking up seemingly solid surfaces,
- (5) stressing vivid contrast between colors in sunlight and shade, and depicting reflected light in all of its possibilities. Unlike earlier artists, they did not want to observe the world from indoors. They abandoned the studio, painting in the open air and recording spontaneous Impressions of their subjects instead of making outside sketches and then moving indoors to complete the work from memory.
- (10) Some of the Impressionists' painting methods were affected by technological advances. For example, the shift from the studio to the open air was made possible in part by the advent of cheap rail travel, which permitted easy and quick access to the countryside or seashore, as well as by newly developed chemical dyes and oils that led to collapsible paint tubes, which enabled artists to finish their paintings on the spot.
- (15) Impressionism acquired its name not from supporters but from angry art lovers who felt threatened by the new painting. The term "Impressionism" was born in 1874, when a group of artists who had been working together organized an exhibition of their paintings in order to draw public attention to their work. Reaction from the public and press was immediate, and derisive. Among the 165 paintings exhibited was one called
- (20) Impression: Sunrise, by Claude Monet (1840-1926). Viewed through hostile eyes, Monet's painting of a rising sun over a misty, watery scene seemed messy, slapdash, and an affront to good taste. Borrowing Monet's title, art critics extended the term "Impressionism" to the entire exhibit. In response, Monet and his 29 fellow artists in the exhibit adopted the same name as a badge of their unity, despite individual differences.

- (25) From then until 1886 Impressionism had all the zeal of a “church”, as the painter Renoir put it. Monet was faithful to the Impressionist creed until his death, although many of the others moved on to new styles.
1. What aspect of painting in the nineteenth century does the passage mainly discuss?
(A) The impact of some artists’ resistance to the fast pace of life
(B) The differences between two major styles of art
(C) A technological advance in the materials used by artists
(D) A group of artists with a new technique and approach to art
 2. The word “depict” in line 2 is closest in meaning to
(A) reorganize (B) deform (C) represent (D) justify

(A) The emphasis on people rather than nature scenes
(B) The way the subjects were presented from multiple angles
(C) The focus on small solid objects
(D) The depiction of the effects of light and color
 4. Which of the following is a significant way in which Impressionists were different from the artists that preceded them?
(A) They began by making sketches of their subjects
(B) They painted their subjects out-of-doors
(C) They preferred to paint from memory
(D) They used subjects drawn from modern life
 5. The word “advent” in line 12 is closest in meaning to
(A) achievement (B) acceptance (C) arrival (D) advantage
 6. The exhibition of paintings organized in 1874 resulted in all of the following EXCEPT
(A) attracting attention from the public
(B) a negative reaction from the press
(C) an immediate demand for the paintings exhibited
(D) creating a name for a new style of painting
 7. The word “affront” in line 22 is closest in meaning to
(A) insult (B) encouragement (C) return (D) credit
 8. The rejection of the Impressionist exhibition by critics was caused by which of the following?
(A) The small number of paintings on display
(B) Lack of interest in exhibitions by young artists
(C) The similarity between all the paintings exhibited
(D) Anger about seemingly poorly painted art
 9. The author mentions Renoir in line 25 to give an example of an artist who
(A) became as famous as Monet
(B) was consistently praised by art critics
(C) described the enthusiasm of the Impressionists for their work
(D) was in favor of a traditional style of painting
 10. The word “others” in line 27 refers to
(A) art critics (B) fellow artists

(C) individual differences

(D) new styles

THE ANONYMOUS LETTER

By A. Christie

Hercule Poirot receives an anonymous letter: 'MR HERCULE POIROT—You fancy yourself, don't you, at solving mysteries that are too difficult for our poor thick-headed British police? Let us see, Mr. Clever Poirot, just how clever you can be. Perhaps you'll find this nut too hard to crack. Look out for Andover on the 21st of the month. Yours, etc., A.B.C.' Hastings, the detective's friend and assistant, thinks it's just a joke. Poirot takes it seriously.

I had been impressed at the time by Poirot's forebodings about the anonymous letter he had received, but I must admit that the matter had passed from my mind when the 21st actually arrived and the first reminder of it came with a visit paid to my friend by Chief Inspector Japp of Scotland Yard. The C.I.D. inspector had been known to us for many years and he gave me a hearty welcome.

"Well, I never," he exclaimed. "If it isn't Captain Hastings back from the wilds of the what do you call it! Quite like old days seeing you here with Monsieur Poirot. You're looking well, too. Just a little bit thin on top, eh? Well, that's what we're all coming to. I'm the same."

I winced slightly. I was under the impression that owing to the careful way I brushed my hair across the top of my head that thinness referred to by Japp was quite unnoticeable. However, Japp had never been remarkable for tact where I was concerned so I put a good face upon it and agreed that we were none of us getting any younger.

"Except Monsieur Poirot here," said Japp. "Quite a good advertisement for a hair tonic, he'd be. Face fungus sprouting finer than ever. Coming out into the limelight, too, in his old age. Mixed up in all the celebrated cases of the day. Train mysteries, air mysteries, high society deaths—oh, he's here, there and everywhere. Never been so celebrated as since he retired."

"I have already told Hastings that I am like the Prima Donna who makes always one more appearance," said Poirot, smiling.

"Shouldn't wonder if you ended by detecting your own death," said Japp, laughing heartily. "That's an idea, that is. Ought to be put in a book."

"It will be Hastings who will have to do that," said Poirot, twinkling at me.

"Ha ha! That would be a joke, that would," laughed Japp.

I failed to see why the idea was so extremely amusing, and in any case I thought the joke was in poor taste. Poirot, poor old chap, is getting on. Jokes about his approaching demise can hardly be agreeable to him.

Perhaps my manner showed my feelings, for Japp changed the subject.

"Have you heard about Monsieur Poirot's anonymous letter?" he asked.

"I showed it to Hastings the other day," said my friend.

"Of course," I exclaimed. "It had quite slipped my memory. Let me see, what was the date mentioned?"

"The 21st," said Japp. "That's what I dropped in about. Yesterday was the 21st and just out of curiosity I rang up Andover last night. It was a hoax all right. Nothing doing. One broken shop window—kid throwing stones—and a couple of drunk and disorderlies. So just for once our Belgian friend was barking up the wrong tree."

"I am relieved, I must confess," acknowledged Poirot.

"You'd quite got the wind up about it, hadn't you?" said Japp affectionately. "Bless you, we get dozens of letters like that coming in every day! People with nothing better to do and a bit weak in the top storey sit down and write 'em. They don't mean any harm! Just a kind of excitement."

"I have indeed been foolish to take the matter so seriously," said Poirot. "It is the nest of the horse that I put my nose into there."

"You're mixing up mares and wasps," said Japp.

"Pardon?"

"Just a couple of proverbs. Well, I must be off. Got a little business in the next street to see to—receiving stolen jewelry. I thought I'd just drop in on my way and put your mind at rest. Pity to let those grey cells function unnecessarily."

With which words and a hearty laugh, Japp departed.

"He does not change much, the good Japp, eh?" asked Poirot.

"He looks much older," I said. "Getting as grey as a badger," I added vindictively.

Poirot coughed and said: "You know, Hastings, there is a little device—my hairdresser is a man of great ingenuity—one attaches it to the scalp and brushes one's own hair over it—it is not a wig, you comprehend—but—"

"Poirot," I roared. "Once and for all I will have nothing to do with the beastly inventions of your confounded hairdresser. What's the matter with the top of my head?"

"Nothing—nothing at all."

"It's not as though I were going bald."

"Of course not! Of course not!"

"The hot summers out there naturally cause the hair to fall out a bit. I shall take back a really good hair tonic."

"Precisement."

"And, anyway, what business is it of Japp's? He always was an offensive kind of devil. And no sense of humour. The kind of man who laughs when a chair is pulled away just as a man is about to sit down."

"A great many people would laugh at that."

"It's utterly senseless."

"From the point of view of the man about to sit, certainly it is."

"Well," I said, slightly recovering my temper. (I admit that I am touchy about the thinness of my hair.) "I'm sorry that anonymous letter business came to nothing."

"I have indeed been in the wrong over that. About that letter, there was, I thought, the odour of the fish. Instead a mere stupidity. Alas, I grow old and suspicious like the blind watchdog who growls when there is nothing there."

"If I'm going to cooperate with you, we must look about for some other 'creamy' crime," I said with a laugh.

1. Give the gist of the passage.

2. Focus on Inspector Japp's speech.

- a) How would you describe his style?
- a) What constructions does the inspector favour?
- b) What techniques does the author use to make his speech sound natural?
- c) What traits of Inspector Japp's character are revealed through his speech? What conclusions can you draw about his personality?

3. The text (including the anonymous letter) abounds in phraseological units.

- a) Do you think they serve to make the dialogue and narration more expressive or are they used mechanically?
- b) Choose one phraseological unit you find especially interesting and analyse it according to the following criteria: meaning, structure, syntactical function, the way it is formed.

4. Get ready to interpret along the following lines.

Note that the story is told in the first person and all the events are recorded through the eyes of the twelve-year-old girl.

1. What kind of story is it? What is the general tone of the story?
2. What is the theme of the story?
3. Who is the narrator? Can the reader trust such a narrator? Would a story be improved if told from the mother's point of view? How would the story change if it were told from the point of view of the 'umbrella man'?
4. Where is the scene set?
5. Who are the main characters? Are they flat or round? Is the 'umbrella man' an antagonist in the story? Is he really a criminal? Why is he successful in his crime? Should he go to prison for it? What do you think he might do when it is not raining?
Give a one-sentence character sketch of the mother, her daughter and the 'umbrella man'.
6. What is the plot of the story? Divide it into several logical parts and entitle each of them. Does the story have a surprise ending? Have you ever been tricked by anybody in a similar way to this?
7. Analyze the composition of the story. Comment on the role of direct speech.
8. What is the message of the story? Speak on its title.

5. Sum up all your literary and stylistic observations and say what makes the authors style individual.

Критерии оценивания комплексного анализа текста

4. Методические материалы, определяющие процедуры оценивания результатов освоения образовательной программы

Формой текущего контроля и промежуточной аттестации является для очной формы обучения: экзамен в 5 семестре, зачет с оценкой в 6 семестре, экзамены в 7, 8 семестрах; для очно-заочной формы обучения: экзамены в 7 и 8 семестрах, зачет с оценкой в 9 семестре, экзамен в 10 семестре.

Экзаменационный билет включает 2 вопроса:

1. Реферирование газетной или журнальной статьи.
2. Лингвостилистический анализ аутентичного текста.

Реферирование предполагает изложение основной проблематики статьи, написанной на русском языке, на английском языке. При устном изложении содержания статьи упор делается на выделение основной мысли автора и формулирование выводов. Студенты должны продемонстрировать компетенции чтения с извлечением основной и существенной информации, компрессии языкового оформления информации и коммуникативную компетенцию.

Для лингвостилистического анализа выбираются отрывки из оригинальных художественных, публицистических и научно-популярных произведений, а также законченные рассказы и эссе английских, американских, канадских и австралийских авторов, классических и современных, известных и неизвестных студентам.

GREENWOOD SCHOOL

By Bill Bryson

Bill Bryson looks back on his childhood and his elementary school.

Greenwood, my elementary school, was a wonderful old building, enormous to a small child, like a castle made of brick. Built in 1901, it stood off Grand Avenue at the far end of a street of outstandingly vast and elegant homes. The whole neighbourhood smelled lushly of old money.

Stepping into Greenwood for the first time was both the scariest and most exciting event of the first five years of my life. The front doors appeared to be about 20 times taller than normal doors and everything inside was built to a similar imposing scale, including the teachers. Everything about it was intimidating and thrilling at once.

It had, for one thing, an auditorium that was just like a real theatre, with a stage with curtains and spotlights and dressing rooms behind. So however bad your school productions were – and ours were always extremely bad, partly because we had no talent and partly because Mrs De Voto, the music teacher, was a bit ancient and often nodded off at the piano – it felt like you were part of a well-ordered professional undertaking (even when you were standing there holding a long note, waiting for Mrs De Voto's chin to touch the keyboard, an event that always jerked her back into action with rousing gusto at exactly the spot where she had left off a minute or two before).

Mostly we played indoors because it was nearly always winter outside. Of course winters in those days, as with all winters of childhood, were much longer, snowier and more frigid than now. We used to get up to 11 feet of snow at a time – we seldom got less, in fact – and weeks of arctic weather so bitter you could pee icicles.

As a scholar, I made little impact. My very first report card, for the first semester of first grade, had just one comment from the teacher: "Billy talks in a low tone." It wasn't even possible to tell whether it was a complaint or just an observation. After the second semester, the report said: "Billy still talks in a low tone."

I was not a pupil popular with the teachers. Only Mrs De Voto liked me, and she liked all the children, largely because she didn't know who any of them were. She wrote "Billy sings with enthusiasm" on all my report cards, except once or twice when she wrote "Bobby sings with enthusiasm." But I excused her for that because she was kind and well-meaning and smelled nice.

All my other report cards – every last one, apart from Mrs De Voto's faithful recording of my enthusiastic noise-making – had blanks in the comment section. There was something about me – my dreaminess and hopeless forgetfulness, my permanent default expression of pained dubiousness – that rubbed my teachers the wrong way. They disliked all children, of course, particularly little boys, but of the children they didn't like I believe they especially favoured me. I always did everything wrong. I forgot to bring official forms back on time. I forgot to bring cookies for class parties and Christmas cards and valentines on the appropriate festive days.

If we were going on a school trip, I never remembered to bring a permission note from home, even after being reminded daily for weeks. So on the day of the trip everybody would have to sit moodily on the bus for an interminable period while the principal's secretary tried to track my mother down to get her consent over the phone. But my mother was always out to coffee. The whole fucking women's department (at the Des Moines Magazine, where she was home furnishings editor) was always out to coffee. If they weren't out to coffee, they were out to lunch. It's a miracle they ever got a section out, frankly. The secretary would eventually look at me with a sad smile and we would have to face the fact together that I wasn't going to go.

So the bus would depart without me and I would spend the day in the school library, which I actually didn't mind at all. It's not as if I were missing a trip to the Grand Canyon or Cape Canaveral. This was Des Moines. There were only two places schools went on trips in Des Moines – to the Wonder Bread factory, where you could watch freshly made bread products travelling round an enormous room on conveyor belts, and the museum of the Iowa State Historical Society, the world's quietest and most uneventful building, where you discovered that not a great deal had ever happened in Iowa; nothing at all if you excluded ice ages.

A more regular humiliation was forgetting to bring money for savings stamps. Savings stamps were like savings bonds, but bought a little at a time. You gave the teacher 20 or 30 cents ($2 if your dad was a lawyer, surgeon or orthodontist) and she gave you a number of patriotic-looking stamps – one for each dime spent – which you then licked and placed over stamp-sized squares in a savings stamp book.

One day each week – I couldn't tell you which one now; I couldn't tell you which one then – Miss Grumpy would announce that it was time to collect money for US saving stamps and every child in the classroom but me would immediately reach into their desk or schoolbag and extract a white envelope containing money and join a line at the teacher's desk. It was a weekly miracle to me that all these other pupils knew on which day they were supposed to bring money and then actually remembered to do so. That was at least one step of sharpness too many for a Bryson.

Each year the teacher held up my pathetically barren book as an example for all the other pupils of how not to support your country and they would all laugh – that peculiar braying laugh that exists only when children are invited by adults to enjoy themselves at the expense of another child. It is the cruellest laugh in the world.

Once a month we had a civil defence drill at school. A siren would sound – a special urgent siren that denoted that this was not a fire drill or storm alert but a nuclear attack by agents of the dark forces of communism – and everyone would scramble out of their seats and get under their desks with hands folded over heads in the nuclear attack brace position. I must have missed a few of these, for the first time one occurred in my presence I had no idea what was going on and sat fascinated as everyone around me dropped to the floor and parked themselves like little cars under their desks.

"What is this?" I asked Buddy Doberman's butt, for that was the only part of him still visible.

"Atomic bomb attack," came his voice, slightly muffled. "But it's OK. It's only a practice, I think."

I remember being profoundly amazed that anyone would suppose that a little wooden desk would provide a safe haven in the event of an atomic bomb being dropped on Des Moines. But evidently they all took the matter seriously for even the teacher was inserted under her desk, too – or at least as much of her as she could get under, which was perhaps 40%. Once I realised that no one was watching, I elected not to take part. I already knew how to get under a desk and was confident that this was not a skill that would ever need refreshing. Anyway, what were the chances that the Soviets would bomb Des Moines? I mean, come on.

So it was perhaps a little unfortunate that on the morning of my third or fourth drill, Mrs Unnaturally Enormous Bosom, the principal, accompanied by a man in a military uniform from the Iowa Air National Guard, made an inspection tour of the school and espied me sitting alone at my desk reading a comic adventure, surrounded by a roomful of abandoned desks, each sprouting a pair of backward-facing feet and a child's ass.

Boy, was I in trouble.

I had embarrassed the school. I had embarrassed the principal. I had shamed myself. I had insulted my nation.

Talk your way into another language

Need to learn another language for a job abroad? Textbooks and tutors may be the worst approach

GO INTO a bar, sit down, relax, have a large drink, try to pick someone up or have an argument, or combine the two. It may look to others as though you are wasting your time. It may even feel that way to you. But so long as you are doing this in a foreign country, where you speak the language badly or not at all, you are probably acquiring a new language better than you ever could by formal study with a teacher and a textbook.

The bar, properly used, beats the classroom hollow. It is full of native speakers asking you questions, telling you to do things, urging you to take an active part in conversation, and using gestures freely to make their intentions clearer—just like your parents did when you were an infant. So, plunge in. All you have to do is talk back.

The proposition that infants can acquire languages by prolonged exposure to them is self-evidently true: it is the only way available to them. Older children and teenagers who move to a different country can pick up a new language with a speed that baffles their parents. But in adulthood we find ourselves envying our rare contemporaries who can still acquire languages easily.

There may be biological reasons why the capacity to learn languages falls away with age, even more than the capacity to learn other things. The brain may be designed to do its best language-learning in infancy, and then to redeploy its resources at puberty.

But psychological factors probably play a big part, too. As we get older, we get more self-conscious, more inhibited, more dependent on people's judgments. This process may undermine our capacity to acquire a new language, because language underpins our sense of personality and identity. We fear to make mistakes in it.

Stephen Krashen, an expert on second-language acquisition at the University of Southern California in Los Angeles, makes a strong case for the dominance of psychological factors in his standard work, “Second Language Acquisition and Second Language Learning” (available free online at www.sdkrashen.com).

So, when we want to learn a new language in mid-life for reasons of career or curiosity, we commonly but wrongly approach it with the sense of doing something difficult and unnatural. We turn to grammar books and compact discs expecting a fight. We are going to “struggle” with the language. We will “master” it, unless it defeats us. And with that sort of attitude, it probably will.

For adults to go on learning languages easily, they need to recapture the indifference of childhood. All other things being equal, the best learner will be the person who is the most relaxed in conversation, and the most self-confident. According to Mr. Krashen, people with outgoing personalities do best at learning a new language because “they have the ego strength to make the necessary mistakes involved in learning.”

Alcohol probably helps, but only within limits. A scientific study in 1972 found that foreigners pronounced Thai sentences better after drinking one to one and a half ounces of alcohol—but not more, and not less. The researchers deduced that a stiff drink could produce a “flexible psychic state” with lowered inhibitions and a heightened sense of empathy.

Language theorists use the metaphor of a “filter” which decides how “open” a person is to a given language in a given situation. The more self-conscious or defensive a person feels, the more finely he or she will filter the incoming language, and the less of it he or she will absorb as a result. This may be why children may pick up accents or dialects from one another more readily than they do from their parents or teachers.

Attitude, not aptitude

So let us return to the bar, with our filter wide open, and see if we cannot do better there despite our advancing age. Striking up conversations here with strangers should be fairly easy, even inevitable. The capacity to speak intelligibly is of secondary importance, especially as the evening wears on.

Even if we lack an easy, outgoing personality, we can probably make up for that by showing our curiosity and enthusiasm for the country and the people around us. Attitude, far more than aptitude, dictates success in language learning, and the best attitude is to want to be more like the people who speak the language already. Then the filter is wide open to everything.

In practical terms, what does this mean for someone who wants to learn a new language? It means, first and foremost, know yourself. If you are the shy neurotic type, then you will probably do best trying to learn a language in a formal way, with a teacher and a textbook. You will not learn to use the language creatively, at least within a short time, but you will learn routines (“hello”, “how are you?”) and patterns (“how much is the...?”) which will give you a façade of competence when carrying out specific tasks.

If, on the other hand, you can talk easily to anyone with enormous charm and vivacity, then go right ahead and do just that in your country of choice. Do not bother with a formal language course at all. It will be a waste of time and money. You will gain more from a week of active informal conversation than you will from a week of formal study.

And what if, like most of us, you fall somewhere in the middle—keen in principle to talk a foreign language, but doubtful of your capacity to do so, and reluctant to walk straight into a foreign bar without at least knowing enough words to buy a drink?

The answer is to find an off-the-shelf language course with the right balance between natural conversation and formal grammar. The optimal balance is probably all natural conversation and no formal grammar at all. Awareness of grammar is more likely to inhibit fluency than encourage it: it makes a speaker more conscious of his or her mistakes. But many adults like to learn grammar, even when they are learning a language for conversational use only, because it gives them a sense of intellectual achievement, and of measurable progress.

Критерии оценки ответов студентов на экзамене

Оценка	Показатели	Количество баллов	Количество баллов (вклад в рейтинг)
отлично	Отметка «отлично» выставляется, если студент: 1. Обнаруживает глубокое понимание основного содержания, темы и идеи предложенных текстов; 2. Грамотно определяет жанрово-стилистическую принадлежность и структурную композицию текстов; 3. Умеет находить нужные факты; делает логичные и аргументированные выводы, подтверждая их примерами из текстов; 4. Правильно выявляет основные стилистические средства и оценивает их коммуникативные задачи в тексте предложенного жанра; 5. При критическом анализе текста оперирует лингвистическими терминами и обнаруживает глубокое знание пройденных дисциплин; 6. Дает правильные ответы на вопросы экзаменатора; 7. Излагает материал последовательно, грамотно и бегло, обнаруживая правильное использование орфоэпических, лексических, грамматических и стилистических норм изучаемого языка (при этом в ответе допускается не более двух полных ошибок, не влияющих на смысловое содержание речи).	81-100	17-20
хорошо	Оценка «хорошо» ставится, если лингвостилистический анализ текста и изложение основной идеи статьи содержательно корректны, но допускаются неточности в аргументировании и в примерах из текстов. Речь студента соответствует орфоэпическим, лексическим, грамматическим и стилистическим нормам изучаемого языка, но допускаются единичные ошибки в произношении, лексике или грамматике, которые самостоятельно исправляются студентом после замечания экзаменатора (не более 3-4 полных ошибок, незначительно влияющих на смысловое содержание речи).	61-80	13-16
удовлетворительно	Оценка «удовлетворительно» ставится, если студент показывает знание и понимание основных положений экзаменационного билета, но обнаруживает недостаточное понимание содержания текстов, недостаточное знание теоретических дисциплин по специальности; его речь изобилует грамматическими и лексическими ошибками (5-7 полных ошибок, в том числе ведущих к искажению смысла высказывания).	41-60	9-12
неудовлетворительно	Оценка «неудовлетворительно» ставится, если студент обнаруживает непонимание текстов, предложенных для анализа, допускает грубые ошибки в устной речи, ведущие к искажению смысла высказывания, не владеет навыками лингвостилистического анализа текста и навыками реферирования.	21-40	5-8
необходимо	Студент не может дать ответ на вопросы	0-20	0-4

повторное изучение	экзаменационного билета, не владеет навыками лингвостилистического анализа текста и навыками реферирования.
